In private school, Daniel tries his hardest to keep the new boy down – but it's he who comes around and sets the pace at their track meet. Then, at the camp basketball game, the real points earned are tolerance and understanding. And Mirko is the new boy in town: he wants so badly to fit in with his classmates that he'll go to questionable lengths to obtain their approval. Embarrassed to train in his old soccer cleats, and with the soccer tournament drawing near, Mirko makes some tough decisions. In an Israeli kibbutz that lies on one side of the West Bank separation wall, Ori feels alienated by his peers and feels he's reached a wall – literally! There, Ori finds an unlikely friend and discovers that Palestinian boys are really not so different from Israeli boys. Sometimes taking the high road is not so easy, but it's the real secret to making your goals!
